What is considered a Service Project?

Service Projects are a way for Scouts to keep their promise to "help other people at all times."

Service projects are meaningful activities that benefit our community, country, or planet.

Planning a Service Project

Your project should:

- Be significant
- Be democratic
- Be clearly defined
- Be well-prepared
- Be promoted
- Include reflection and recognition

Involve Scouts and parents in planning and implementing service projects.

Know the following before you start:

General Project Description.

What organization is the project for, or who or what will the project benefit?

What materials are needed to complete the project?

How long will the project take?

Are there any costs involved?

Is there any special permission needed?

Is the project age-appropriate?

Are there any safety concerns for participants? (Consult the Guide for Safe Scouting.)

Is the project manageable within the time frame and the number of volunteers involved?

Take time for reflection and discussion as a group

- What impact did the project have?
- How could the effort be improved?
- How could you work better as a team?
- Why is it important to give back?
- Open discussion and sharing.
